This activity was maintained until the second half of the 19th century. In the Lettre sur le commerce de la librairie Diderot includes a brief history of publishing that hardly glorifies Gutenberg or his French contemporaries. Kenneth J. With an introduction by Manfred Kossok. Kreckel K. HHoltA.URL:www.In all of the areas above, we can see that the essential distinction that Diderot makes is between, on the one hand, books as objects that people want to possess for their monetary value or their social prestige, and, on the other hand, books as useful objects or tools that allow experts to produce more books.
